OBJECTIVES AND TOPICS

GLOBAQUA aims at identifying the prevalence, interaction and linkages between stressors, and to assess their effects on the status of freshwater ecosystems in order to improve water management practice and policies. The project assembles a multidisciplinary team of 23 scientific institutions, as well as water authorities and river basin managers, and includes experts in geomorphology, biology, chemistry, hydrology, modelling, socio-economics and policy advocacy.

CYOTHREAT is a research project that deals with the occurrence and fate of anticancer drugs and their transformation products, as well as potential impact of selected anticancer drugs and their mixtures on aquatic organisms and humans, in order to define possible risks and to support introduction of appropriate regulation.

ENDETECH program promotes the development of a novel eco-efficient environmental technology whose use can substantially contribute to the reduction of polluting emissions. The global objective of the program is to contribute to cleaning water bodies by improving the treatment of wastewater before it reaches the environment. The removal of pharmaceutical pollutants and endocrine disruptors in urban, hospital, and/or industrial effluents will be an important step towards the regeneration of pristine rivers, lakes but also groundwater reservoirs.

SCARCE is a multipurpose project that aims to describe and predict the relevance of global change impacts on water availability, water quality and ecosystem services in Mediterranean river basins of the Iberian Peninsula, as well as their impacts on the human society and economy.

The three EU projects funded under the European Union's Seventh Framework Programm together with SCARCE from the Consolider Programm (Spanish Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness), have joined efforts to prepare a unique conference in which pharmaceuticals will be considered from a multidisciplinary perspective. The Conference is planned in form of oral talks, posters and discussions, where experts from different fields can share their knowledge.
